Exports and investments, the recovery comes from international markets

Maurizio Marullo, interviewed by ItaliaOggi in the article ‘Export and investments, the recovery comes from international markets’, explained:

“Growth in these macro geographical areas often requires the identification of local partners of the highest level, with whom to negotiate and set up joint ventures aimed at establishing production facilities and strengthening their commercial presence in the selected territories.

We refer, in particular, to countries such as China, India or Brazil, which limit the possibility of purchasing goods or services from companies with entirely foreign capital, either directly, through entry tariff barriers, or indirectly, through restrictions or disincentives for local companies.

To mention just a few examples, the growth of sectors such as medical devices, specialty chemicals, precision mechanical instruments, and agricultural and livestock machinery requires, in the vast majority of cases, corporate partnerships with production and commercial functions.”
